Nancy.

The White Mountains have not been neglected in literature. They have inspired admirable prose, lofty verse. But one scarcely looks earlier than Whittier, their most faithful and famous poet, to find them celebrated in rhyme.

Yet a recent deliver in antiquarian lore declares that more than eighty years ago a mountain tragedy itself dating back yet further to the century 1st, had become the theme of a romantic poem by no less a person than the author of "The breaking waves dashed high"—or, as an early traveller of that period phrased it:

"The region of these mountains is already immortalized by the chaste and elegant pen of the celebrated Mrs. Hemans of Europe."

Mrs. Hemans had, the traveler reluctantly admitted, got the story a little twisted; still her "sweet" and "plaintive strains" atoned by their quality for the slight error of giving her heroine Nancy a faithless lover, whereas the real youth had been loyal.

Nancy—the real Nancy—was a pretty young serving-maid in the employ of Captain Page of Portsmouth. The captain decided to establish a pioneer home in Lancaster, New Hampshire, on the verge of the wilderness, and persuaded the girl much against her will, for she was betrothed and soon to be married, to go on with him in advance of the family, to cook for the builders who were erecting the house. He promised that she should return with him when he came back for his wife and children.

The house building took longer than was expected, and Nancy grew impatient to leave. At last the captain set out for Portsmouth; but he meanly slipped away alone doubtless wishing to detain a good servant long enough to make the family comfortable on their arrival. The disappointment was so keen, and Nancy, despite the oncoming winter, thin clothing, and a hundred and thirty miles to walk, set out on foot for home.

For thirty-two miles out of Lancaster there was neither house nor road; the dim and rugged trail led through the frowning mountain wilderness of the Crawford Notch. But Nancy followed it unswerving, passed through the Notch, and struggled on, soaked by rain, and then hampered by snow, for cruel miles beyond.

Two more and she would have reached a house, but she sat down exhausted on a log to rest and never rose again. Long after a party of hunters, kindling their evening fire, caught a glint of firelight on something odd nearby that looked like a man. They went close, and saw the body of a young girl frozen to a statue of ice.

It is a moving little tragedy of home-sickness, even without the embellishment of the chaste and elegant pen of Mrs. Hemans, whose poem on poor Nancy's fate is as generally forgotten as that of the Pilgrim Fathers is generally remembered.—[Youth's Companion.]

Road Experimenting.

The Rickers are experimenting with new material for the preservation of road surface and for the laying of dust. It is a by-product of the pulp mills at Ausable, N. Y. It is a solid, shipped in barrels, and is mixed with water—one part to four of water. When spread upon the highways, it is claimed to render them an ideal surface. This substance is called "glutinitin."

It was discovered, like many other similar things, by accident. For many years there was a fight made in New York state against the pollution of the waters of Lake Champlain by the pulp mills along the Ausable River. The result was that the mills had to seek a new place to dispose of their refuse and in so doing discovered several valuable by-products, among others, glutinitin.

The result of the experiments in road making on Ricker Hill will be watched with interest.

Cattle Show and County Fair.

As a Boy Saw It Forty Years Ago.

I wonder if there ever was a boy who grew up in the country and took no part in this period of his life attend the old-fashioned country county cattle show and fair. One of the most delightful experiences of my boyhood was a day at the fair and cattle show.

I was 12 years old, was born and had always lived upon a farm. At rare intervals I had been "to town" and once or twice had been, in a staid and proper way, with my father, to the fair and cattle show; but this year I was to go alone—early in the morning and stay all day!

The day before my father, having business in town, carried me with him to the house of my aunt who lived near the fair grounds; and I was there over night that I might be on hand to enjoy the very earliest doings of the fair ground.

I had little sleep that night and was up before 5 o'clock. My aunt, good as I was, and I were there early start, gave me breakfast; so that before 6 o'clock I was on my way to the fair ground, a mile distant. Of course, as you can well imagine, I was there way ahead of everybody.

There were many gatekeepers, so the quarter which my father had given me with some few pennies to spend remained in my pocket as there was no one to take it when I went through the gate.

How well I remember the delights that flowed me as I wandered about the grounds that morning. There were the side show tents, all closed, still wrapped in sleep. There were the men who were taking care of the stock that had been brought in the night before, feeding and grooming the horses and cattle, caring for the sheep and pigs and poultry. The great building in the center of the grounds, which would be so active later, was closed and looked.

Pretty soon I saw a man go over the gate. I surmised that he was to be the gate-tender and ticket-taker; and, when he saw me and called to me, I suspected that he wanted my quarter. Being very busy with some men who had a lot of fine cows I made it a point not to hear him.

By this time I had begun to feel that I very much needed all of that quarter, and I satisfied my conscience by reasoning that I had gotten up early and that there was no one to take my fare when I came in, so I was entitled to stay. Or, for the times during the day the gate-keeper called to me to come and pay my quarter. I doubt now if he would have taken it had I gone to him; but I felt, then that my quarter was the main thing on my mind.

The day was much too short to see and do all the things that attracted me. There were the new plows. One I remember in particular, the first sulky plow that I had ever seen—a plow with an actual seat and wheels, and the man who did the plowing sat on the seat and rode! I had never seen anything like that.

I remember the vegetable cutter, one of the most interesting and fascinating things to me. You could put in a whole turnip or pumpkin and turn a crank and it would cut out in a perfectly little, round, home-made sausage, all buttoned up in their crisp little jackets, with plenty of sage for a dressing and a plate of brown cakes.

Tenderloins are good, too—pork tenderloins, with plenty of gravy and some creamed potatoes to go with them—aren't you glad you don't belong to a dieting club?

What cold comforts those breakfast foods look on a Fall morning like this, don't they?

Hurrah! It's Fall! Let's go down town and order the meat for the sausage and the grapes for the jelly and the pumpkins for the pies.

What—are those Hubbard squashes over there in the corner of the market? Let's have them cut—out one of those squashes into four comfortable pieces, put them in a pan and roast them in a slow oven—serve them in their shell, with some good butter and lots of pepper and salt—and, dear me, what a farol those summer dinners we've been having were, weren't they?

Fall's here—with the open fire and the long evenings in the dancing firelight—the evenings that mean so much to friendship and to family life.

I'll get acquainted with each other all over again, won't we, sitting there in the glow of the friendly flames? And the book we haven't had time to read all Summer, and the letters it was too hot to write, and the children who wouldn't come into the house till bedtime, we'll gather them all about us again, for it's heart time, home time, fire time, Fall time. Hurrah for Fall!

Fall Is Here.

A chill in the air this morning. Have you noticed the sunshine—how yellow it is?

As yellow as the maple leaves that fluttered down in the green grass by the window this morning.

As yellow as potted holly, as yellow as a clot of amber—Fall sunshine—the sunshine that means "get your winter clothes ready; you'll need them in a week or two when you go to the beach forest to hide till next Spring comes again."

What did you have for breakfast—melons and scrambled eggs? Pshaw! What kind of a breakfast is that in Fall? Hot biscuits and honey are what you really need, or some nice little, brown, home-made sausage, all buttoned up in their crisp little jackets, with plenty of sage for a dressing and a plate of brown cakes.

Tenderloins are good, too—pork tenderloins, with plenty of gravy and some creamed potatoes to go with them—aren't you glad you don't belong to a dieting club?

In no part of Maine are there older residents in large numbers than around Fryeburg. It seems to be a beautiful country and the people who reach the Biblical limit of four-score and ten are numerous. One of these, now in her 90th year, is Mrs. Daniel Emerson, a native of Fryeburg, who is living nearby in the "Cold River region," and who is still able to do the housework for her son, Warren Emerson, who is a widower.

A year ago there were nine old ladies nearing their ninetieth year living within a radius of three miles in this Cold River neighborhood. But the last winter thinned out the ranks and only two or three are left.

"Just a little tickling in the throat!" Is that what troubles you? But it hangs on! Can't get rid of it! Home remedies don't take hold. "The Village." Included in a lot of second-hand books, pamphlets, broadsides and other literary property retailed at public vendue in Boston last Thursday was a copy of the volume entitled "The Village," which was written by Enoch Lincoln when he resided here, and which was published in Portland in 1816. The copy was in good condition, and on its title page contained an autograph presentation inscription from the author, and yet it brought only $1.50, which is $2.25 less than a somewhat dilapidated copy brought at auction in Boston on the 3d of last February.

"The Village" is a volume of 180 pages, consisting of a poem, which ends on page 90 and of a prose appendix which fills the remaining 90 pages. The appendix is divided into three parts, Part I, consisting of "Sketches of Slavery," Part II, of "Sketches of the Follies and Cruelties Growing out of the Penal Law, with an Introductory Section upon the Follies and Cruelties of Superstition."

Though the village from which the volume takes its title is, or rather was, Fryeburg Village, the beautiful scenery and the social condition of the village and its vicinity being the subject of which the poetic part of the volume treats, yet very few if any copies of the book are to be found hereabouts.

The volume was published anonymously, and in the dedication of it says that "The name of the author is concealed because it is too humble to add weight to his claims and his pride is too cautious to hazard the mortification of being neglected."

The author was, later in his life, a member of the National House of Representatives, and, still later, was Governor of Maine, he being an incumbent of the latter office at the time of his death, Oct. 8, 1829. (By the way, William B. Lapham's History of Paris, of which town Gov. Lincoln was for several years a resident, erroneously—page 343—gives Oct. 11, 1829, as the date of his death.)

During Mr. Lincoln's term of service as Governor his brother, Levi Lincoln, was, by a curious coincidence, Governor of Massachusetts. Does any reader of the ADVERTISER know of any other instance of brothers who were Governors of States at one and the same time?

Charles Gabre of the Franklin annex at Rumford found Paris green in his flour barrel. Gabre has been living alone on a farm owned by the Duntun Lumber Co., care for the company's property, and he has kept a pretty strict watch, preventing many cases of petty thieving.

A Sudden Death.
The community was shocked last Thursday morning to hear of the sudden death of Mrs. L. A. Benson, which took place in the night after but about an hour's sickness.

She was the widow of David Benson and had lived in this place many years, and was loved and respected by all. Her age was 68 years. Mrs. Benson was a great reader, a kind neighbor, a devoted mother and a loyal daughter.

She leaves to mourn their loss an aged mother, Mrs. Judith Stearns; one son, Walter, with whom she lived; two step-daughters, Alice and Ida Benson of Haverhill; two grand-sons; one brother, Thomas Stearns of Lowell; and one sister, Mrs. B. Ayers, who lives in Pennsylvania. To the aged mother this is a terrible blow.

The funeral was at the house Saturday afternoon. Rev. Mr. Doughty officiated. The flowers were a pillow with the word, "Mother," Walter Benson, and pink and white flowers. Alice and Ida Benson; and many other pieces and cut flowers from relatives and friends.

A. W. McKeen is attending court at Paris.

Rev. E. F. Doughty and family, returned to their home in Alfred, Saturday.

Mr. and Mrs. W. S. Leavitt were in the place, and attended church, Sunday morning.

There was an all-day meeting Friday at the church, and several ministers were present.

Mrs. Abbie Waterhouse was at her home here, several days last week. Her sister, Mrs. E. L. Walker was with her.

Mrs. C. F. Waterhouse of North Conway, has returned to her home, after spending a week with her sister, Mrs. A. W. McKeen.

SAYS ALBERTA LAND IS CHEAP

Another Visitor Comments on Southern Alberta Opportunities

In common with the many visitors who came to Lethbridge, Dr. Shields, of Dakota, who is spending a short time in this district remarked that he was delighted at the appearance of the city and district. Mr. Shields has already invested to some extent in Southern Alberta lands and is going to invest some more.

"The Southern Alberta lands are the best thing anywhere," he remarked. Mr. Shields went into Dakota when land was as cheap as it is in some places in Alberta now and at present he states that you can't touch it with less than fifty or sixty dollars an acre and land that will raise wheat like is being raised here is sure to reach even higher figures than that. In Dakota Mr. Shields remarked land was reckoned to be worth twice as many dollars as it will grow bushels of wheat per acre—Lethbridge, Alberta. Daily Herald. 41-43

ALBANY.

Sarah Lizzie Becker.
We are saddened to learn of the death of one who went from this county with her parents to build up our great west. In 1882 the subject of this sketch left Waterford with the rest of her father's family for Sparta, Wis. Her father, Deacon Isaac Becker, who was well known throughout this section and respected by all; and with whom he dealt was considered a strictly conscientious, square dealing man. He had reared a family of six children, three sons and three daughters, which he had worked hard to educate and fit for life's work, so they might be lights in the world.

Lizzie Becker was born in Albany, Oct. 6th, 1883, on the farm now occupied by Charles R. Morey. When quite young, her father moved, I think to Sweden, and later, from there to Waterford.

Mr. Becker and his wife, Sarah Frye Becker, both passed away several years ago, although not until he had filled several public offices of trust, and had seen his children fitted for teachers, etc., to continue the good work to which he had always lent a helping hand.

To come back to our subject, Lizzie left her home in good health, to go to her brother's, John E. Becker's, who is a teacher at Fort Pierre, S. D. She was taken ill while on the train and on arrival at Fort Pierre a physician was called who pronounced it pneumonia, of which she died in the hospital, Sept. 16.

A few days later, suitable resolutions were offered and published by the Beaver Creek Reading Circle, of which she was the organizer, and a very active member.

She was for several years an active member of the Congregational church. She also leaves several near and dear relatives and friends here in Maine, to mourn the loss.

SHAW BUSINESS COLLEGE

FOUNDED 25 YEARS AGO.

Wonderful Growth and Success of Institution—Thousands of Graduates Now in Positions of Responsibility and Trust.

Twenty-five years ago F. L. Shaw, who has been connected with business college work for several years, decided to branch out and start a business college for himself. In one room in the Motley building in Portland he commenced his work. He advertised the fact, startling at that time, that no tuition would be demanded in advance. His one-room school had a capacity of 20.

The new building, which was built by the Shaw Business College in Portland, was obtained in 1890. These rooms are now becoming overcrowded and it is more than likely that increased school space will be obtained.

In 1894 the Shaw Business College, Augusta, which was an old established institution, being founded in 1864, was acquired by Mr. Shaw. This innovation of a business school having branches was looked upon by some as too radical a change to meet with success, but as his methods were soon admitted to be worthy of commendation, and as the name of the Shaw Business College became more widely known more business came to the door of the school. It was about this time that George D. Harden, a graduate of the school, became one of the foremost lights of the institution. His work had attracted the attention of Mr. Shaw and when the Shaw Business College corporation was founded in 1895, Mr. Harden was chosen treasurer, F. L. Shaw being president and Hon. E. C. Reynolds, secretary.

In opening the Bangor branch a new era in the school was commenced. The main school in Portland with branches in Augusta and Bangor, formed a chain throughout the center of the state that is of inestimable value to the employment department of the institution. Thus, if the manager of the Augusta branch of the employment department has a position for some member of the school and has no student in his school advanced far enough in the intricacies of business life to accept, he immediately telephones to Bangor or to Portland and consequently the man in search of a stenographer or bookkeeper is almost sure to obtain what he desires by merely asking the management of the Shaw Business College.

The value of the services of Mr. Harden to the school is beyond estimation. His great knowledge of business methods now in vogue makes him a valuable instructor as well as manager. His persistence in following out the plan adopted by the president has brought success in great measure to the Bangor branch of the school, and it is in the course of events he should ever desire to leave the school, his successor would have but little trouble in picking up the reins of management where Mr. Harden would leave them.

The Bangor branch of the school was opened in the Bass building in 1898 with Mr. Harden as manager, and it is because of all that the immediate success of the institution was due entirely to the energetic methods of its manager. Always courteous and direct, he has an attractive personality that invites the confidence of his pupils and of business men who have dealings with him. The Bangor school occupies the fourth and fifth floors of the Bass building and has the finest quarters of the kind in the state.

What this school has accomplished during its 25 years of existence is remarkable. Thousands of pupils have received diplomas and a diploma from the Shaw Business College is as fine a recommendation as a young man can desire with which to start life's battle. The annual enrollment of the three schools is about 500 and the constant demand of business men for office help makes it imperative for some of the brighter pupils to start out before the year is actually completed. The number of students who obtain positions of trust and responsibility through the employment department of the school is more than surprising. There is an opinion prevalent that a stenographer or bookkeeper is in a small demand. The error of this opinion can be best proven by a look at the letters being received daily by the manager of the school from business men asking for a stenographer or bookkeeper or for a young man well up in business methods. This demand is so large that, as quoted above, the management is unable to satisfy all requests.

The increase in the number of the young women who are students in the school is one of the most surprising features of the work. When the school was commenced not more than five per cent. of the entire enrollment were women, but now fully half of the enrollment is female. This increase is attributed to the fact that girls are more desirable as stenographers and yet there seem to be not enough.

This record of 25 years of teaching the young to cope with the business life is a most brilliant one and reflects nothing but credit on the names of the men who have accomplished so much.

Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Warren are entertaining guests at their home. Manville Seavey is painting his house. He has Leslie Poore at work for him.

Alvana Stuart, the milliner, has Blanche Dennett at work for her this season.

Mrs. Sarah M. Quint and Mrs. Hattie Thompson of Portland visited at Albert Blake's during fair week.

A large dormer window has been added to the ell at the Spring farm, which will make another large, pleasant room for boarders.

Mrs. George Files and baby daughter came from Portland this week and will board at John Staples'. Mrs. Hodadon of Boothbay is also visiting her daughter, who boards there.

Services were resumed at the Universalist church, Sunday. Both exterior and interior are very much improved by paint, staining, a new steel ceiling, etc., and when the new carpet is down will be very pretty.

The funeral of Mrs. Broughton Bartlett was held on Friday afternoon at 1 o'clock. Rev. Mr. Cotton of Waterboro was the officiating clergyman, and Mrs. Lena Blake was soloist. Interment was in the East Brownfield cemetery.

There was a large attendance at the Harvest supper given by Pearl Rebekah lodge on Tuesday evening, and the proceeds were about $12 which will be sent to the L. O. O. F. Orphans' Home fund by the delegates to the Rebekah Assembly, Mrs. Chas. Harmon.

WEST PARIS.

From Health to Death.

The community received a great shock when, Sunday evening, the report was circulated that Charles M. Swift had passed away. A man who was apparently in good health one minute and the next was lifeless, caused by heart failure. Mr. Swift has spent the most of his life in the vicinity of West Paris with the exception of a few years in Pennsylvania. He was an engineer by trade and for the past five years has run the engine for the West Paris branch of the Paris, Maine, Co., not missing one moment of time on duty.

He has made his home with Mrs. Laura Reed for a good many years. His room there was reserved for him even while he was at work elsewhere. For the last few years, on account of poor health, Mrs. Reed has been unable to board him so he has taken his meals at the hotel next door.

Last Sunday, Oct. 10, Mr. Swift was around all day as usual. After supper he went to the office then back into the hall and dropped dead.

When he received the news through a messenger in less than half an hour after he had seen and talked with him at the Grand Trunk railroad station.

Mr. Swift was the oldest of seven children who lived to grow up and son of Alvin and Caroline (Paine) Swift of Woodstock, and later of West Paris. His father was a farmer, who lived at Fondulac, Wis., Melville, an engineer on a railroad, in Chicago, Ill., Alice is the wife of E. M. Heath, who keeps a music store on Lisbon St., Lewiston, Dan, a pilot, who lives in Monticello, Me., Wash., Lottie is the wife of C. H. Willis of Washington, who was for a number of years baggage master on the G. T. R. R., but now a collector in the Prudential Life Insurance Co., and Alvin D. of this place.

His mother died when Alvin was nine months old. The home was then broken up and three or four of the youngest were separated and put into good homes. His father, who is still living, has become feeble minded and about two years ago the children had him taken to the Inebriate Asylum to be cared for.

Charles Swift was 54 years and a few months old and unmarried.

He was kind hearted and generous and fond of children. Among the mourners was a band of little boys who, he had befriended and helped to have a good time. There are many other grown up children who have not forgotten his, gratuitous nature. That he gave to those who needed it, wherever he found them, more than ever will be known. Withal, he was frugal and it was found that he had accumulated a goodly sum of money.

He was fond of flowers and kept a garden in the grounds near his engine room. Many a child received an early-spring bouquet.

He was always faithful in discharging his duty to his employers, even to the risk of his own life.

The funeral was held Tuesday afternoon at two o'clock at the Universalist church. Rev. Isabella S. Macduff made fitting remarks on the character of the deceased. The last and final service was conducted by the order of F. and A. M. of which he was a member in good standing.

It was a very rainy day, nevertheless a large body of Masons, shopmates, little boys and friends were present.

The flowers were many and beautiful. A large upright piece with "Shopmates", a pillow with "Brother", a large basket with "Brother", a bouquet of pinks from the little boys, a bouquet of gladioli, dahlias and sweet peas from friends. A respected citizen and faithful friend has passed on.

Jennie M. Brown has been visiting a week in Boston.

Mrs. W. W. Dunham is receiving a visit from her friend, Mrs. Hutchinson.

Mrs. Elva E. Locke is in Portland this week attending the Music Festival.

John Mayhew is running the engine for the Paris, Maine, Co. for the present.

Mr. Quincy Day received a visit, last week, from two of her sisters, Mrs. Rines and Miss Adams from Gardiner.

Henry Dean and family are going to move the last of this week to North Waterford. They have been living in E. R. Davis' unstable rent.

A very pleasant and enjoyable occasion was spent last Monday evening, when Mr. and Mrs. E. R. Tuell gave their daughter Elinor a birthday party to 20 of her young friends.

Spent mostly in playing whist. Among the several pretty and useful gifts was a beautiful bouquet of roses from which each guest received one with the place card. Refreshments of ice cream and assorted cakes and crackers were served together with the customary birthday cake which was surrounded by 16 lighted candles, with the usual special significance.

Mrs. Baby Pettengill, wife of Harry Pettengill, passed away Saturday, after a brief illness. Services were held at her late home, Tuesday at 1 o'clock, conducted by Rev. Mr. Hand of Bethel.

In our minds only a few short years, she seemed herself to many by her quiet way and charming personality. She leaves a husband, father, mother, brother and sisters.
